

Are you interested in network policy issues and keen to conduct exciting research at the interface between technology and society with a focus on the active participation and involvement of citizens and those affected? Are you ready to put your analytical skills into practice and learn from ongoing projects as part of a team?

For support in the European research project IDEM (Innovative and Inclusive Democratic Spaces for Deliberation and Participation) with a focus on digital citizen participation, participation, socio-technical systems and intersectionality, we are hiring a student assistant in the Networks and Society department of the nexus Institute for 15-20 h/week at the earliest possible date.

Student Assistant (m/w/d)

Your tasks

- Research and academic collaboration in the field of citizen participation processes, digital democracy, and intersectionality of hard-to-reach groups.
- Support in the preparation, implementation and evaluation of qualitative methods, in particular expert interviews and focus groups.
- Support in the implementation of UX design processes (by organizing workshops and user surveys)
- Support in the preparation of research reports and articles

Your profile:

- Degree preferably in a social science field, preferably with a technical focus (or also technical science with a social focus).
- Commitment and interest in topics of (digital) citizen participation, social inclusion and intersectionality, user-centered design & innovation or UX research.
- Ideally initial knowledge or experience of empirical research methods
- Very good written and spoken English skills
- Enjoy interdisciplinary work and an independent way of working

What can you expect:

- Insight into exciting topics between digitalization, technology and society and practical experience in empirical research
- Flexible working hours and location by arrangement
- Varied tasks in a collegial team
- Pleasant working atmosphere & calm office in the green
- 15€/h remuneration
